Discover the fascinating story of Queens' President Isaac Milner and the Enlightenment of late Georgian Queens'

This controversial and (literally) larger than life figure shaped the progress of both Queens' and the University during his lengthy tenure as Queens' president (1788-1820) and as vice chancellor (1793, 1810). Against the feverish political atmosphere that followed the French Revolution Milner, the 'declared foe of infidels and Jacobins' and close friend of William Wilberforce, sought to place Newtonian scientific reasoning at the heart of undergraduate education in Cambridge. Alongside scientific instruments and letters, the exhibition reflects his achievements and philosophy through a selection of books drawn from the vast library he bequeathed to Queens'.

Join us in the Munro Room/Old Library for wine and nibbles on Tuesday Feb. 10 at 5.15 when the exhibition opens with a brief talk by the famous historian of science, Prof. Simon Schaffer. RSVP to library@queens.cam.ac.uk (by Feb. 7).

The exhibition will also be open to view @ 12.30-4.00 on Feb. 11-13, 16-17, and during the Cambridge Science Festival.
